

Bahai

Here is the right time, to intervene with understanding. I always say that we must learn before the highest principles

Islam Imam

The most important thing for me is to know each other better. Know and recognize. An open, constructive dialogue is able to build the bridge between different men and cultures, to make them meet for the good of the community

Soka Gakkai

The call to the young people that Daisaku Ikeda gave to the Pope is in my opinion, the starting point upon we will base all our activities. It is call to resilience, it is a call not to fall, it is a call to go beyond our feelings of uselessness, of lack of hope

Catholic

We try to live together and listen to each other. About Islam, it is multiple and we saw it evolve

Catholic Priest

To Amin Maalouf, it would be important that in Europe every young person speaks at least three languages, to be able to start a dialogue with other young Europeans. At the same, I think that every young person should be able to speak about at least three religions deeply

Jewish

There are frequent (in which I frequently participate) forums in which we debate coexistence

Orthodox

I think the affirmation of each ones identity and not imposing it is the key of collaboration with other religions

Adventist & Baptist

The fact that we do not have roots in common with Islam or Buddhism believers does not mean that we do not talk with them

Evangelical Reformed

In my opinion we are not "the only rightful ones (...)" I think it has nothing to do with not accepting the ideas of another religion, this is just xenophobia

Catholic

So I have contact with others: there is friendliness and openness

Imam

Now in Verviers the Muslim, catholic and Protestant communities have recurring activities, two or three a year, always aiming to be useful, in the service
